Report Highlights:

This report highlights the major agriculture-related trade shows in Burma in 2026 and identifies several regional events where U.S. exporters may connect with local buyers interested in sourcing U.S. agricultural and related products. FAS Rangoon continues to support U.S. exporters seeking further information about opportunities for U.S. food and agricultural products in Burma. As of publication for this report, the U.S. Department of State advises U.S. citizens against travel to Burma.

Trade Shows and Conferences in Burma: Overview and Current Landscape

Trade shows and conferences in Burma (also known as Myanmar) have historically served as important platforms for U.S. exporters to engage directly with local importers, traders, and distributors. In Burma's relationship-driven business environment, these events supported trust building, product promotion, and firsthand understanding of market dynamics. Many businesses remain cautiously optimistic that the business climate will improve in 2026. In that case, trade shows and conferences may create renewed opportunities for market engagement and trade activities. Prior to making any travel plans, U.S. citizens are encouraged to consult the U.S. State Department's travel advisory for Burma, which as of January 20, 2026 remains "Level 4: Do Not Travel".

Current Trade Show and Conference Environment in Burma (2022–2026)

Burma has continued to host a range of trade shows since the 2021 coup, but the overall number and scope remain limited compared to other events in the region. There are no USDA- endorsed trade shows in Burma, though Burmese importers commonly attend endorsed shows such as Food & Hotel Asia (Singapore), THAIFEX – Anuga Asia (Thailand), VIV Asia (Thailand), and Food Ingredients Asia (rotating between Thailand and Indonesia). In Burma, major industry events are primarily held in Yangon (also known as Rangoon) and include food and beverage expos (such as Myanmar FoodBev), retail sourcing exhibitions, textile and garment shows, as well as agriculture and industrial trade fairs. These events bring together local and international companies with a strong focus on sourcing and business networking, and several organizers have begun consolidating multiple sectors into larger, combined exhibitions covering a broad range of industries.

Also, Burma hosts several sector-specific fora and conferences each year, including those for rice, corn, pulses and beans organized by the relevant local associations. Event dates and schedules are often not finalized or publicly available for the full year. U.S. exporters interested in these events or others that pertain to their commodity, food, or beverage category may contact OAA Rangoon (AgRangoon@usda.gov) for guidance and support. Post recommends potential exhibitors/participants confirm event details and logistics independently, plan early, and prepare marketing materials in advance.
